Ventilation

The Importance Of Attic Venting

Proper attic ventilation keeps your house warm in winter, cooler in summer and extends the life of your roof by venting moisture from your attic to prevent rot, mold, and mildew. Your home should have soffit vents to bring outside air into your attic and ridge and gable vents to let hot air out. Shingle warranties may make coverage conditional on meeting their minimum ventilation requirements. Consult manufacturer for specific ventilation requirements when selecting a shingle product.

Time For A New Roof?

Watch For These Warning Signs

BARE SPOTS The protective granular surface of shingles wears off, often accumulating in the gutter.

BUCKLING A visible distortion in the horizontal lines of shingles, usually running in a straight line up the slope.

CURLING The upward curling of shingle tabs make them highly susceptible to wind and ice damage.

CLAWING This is the curling under of the shingle tab's bottom edge and is part of the normal aging process.

Customize With Finishing Options

When selecting siding, it's important to think beyond colour and also consider profiles and finishes available. Siding profiles vary and can give your house very different looks. Some profiles are wide, some narrow, some have grooves cut into them. Finishes can be rough like fresh cut cedar or smooth like sanded and painted wood planks while decorative trim, moulding and shutters can make your project look complete. TIMBER MART can help you determine the right choices for your siding project. We'll show you options available, discuss your preferences and budget and make sure your project meets all your expectations.

Soffit Vents

Adequate intake ventilation is critical for a healthy roof. Soffit vents allow fresh air to enter the attic and roof vents allow hot and moist air to exit. You need both for a healthy attic and roof.
